

Green Theatre

Tuesday 12 February 2008
Mark Lawson presenting

Mark Lawson reports from the Arcola Theatre in North London, which has installed a hydrogen fuel cell to power its latest play, allowing it to be fully sustainable. Mark also visits the National Theatre to find out how they are attempting to reduce the carbon footprint and discusses how film-makers and theatres in general can help with the Mayor of London's head of Cultural Strategy.

The Living Unknown Soldier is at the Arcola Theatre until 15 March 2008
